SOLIDARITY THAT CANNOT BE CONFINED

SUPPORT. DON’T PUNISH
2020 GLOBAL DAY OF ACTION
SUMMARY REPORT
Support. Don’t Punish is a global, decentralised and grassroots-centred initiative that mobilises communities targeted by and resisting repressive drug policies. Under a common banner, we promote harm reduction and drug policies that prioritise health, well-being and human rights.

The campaign seeks to raise the profile of harm reduction and non-punitive responses to drug-related challenges by strengthening communities’ mobilisation capacity, opening dialogue with policy-makers, and raising awareness among the media and the public.

KEY MESSAGES OF THE CAMPAIGN

The drug control system is broken and in need of reform.

People who use drugs should not be criminalised.

People involved in the drug trade should not face harsh or disproportionate punishments.

The death penalty should never be imposed for drug offences.

Drug policy should focus on health, well-being and harm reduction.

Drug policy budgets need rebalancing to ensure health and harm reduction-based responses are adequately financed.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND DIGNITY

The latest UNODC World Drug Report estimates that the number of drug-related deaths reached 585,000 in 2017. That’s over 65 deaths every hour.

Most of these deaths are related to overdose and untreated hepatitis C, which speaks volumes of the multiple health crises at the heart of drug-related harm.

Only 1% of people who inject drugs live in countries where basic harm reduction services are within adequate reach.

Moreover, these tragic numbers do not account for the trail of pain and death resulting from other forms of violence fuelled by the “war on drugs”: disappearances, police and extra-judicial killings, death penalty executions, arrests, incarceration, lack of access to controlled medicines, among many others.

These harms and these deaths disproportionately impact communities already targeted by intersecting forms of oppression. And they can be reduced and prevented through responses that prioritise health and welfare.

These include diverse, effective and accessible harm reduction initiatives and services that respond to community needs.

For the last eight years, Support. Don’t Punish campaigners across the globe have mobilised with this purpose, advocating for drug policies and narratives that centre human rights and dignity. For the benefit of all in our communities.

BUILDING THE RESPONSE
THAT OUR COMMUNITIES DESERVE

A COLLECTIVE CALL FOR CHANGE
The Support. Don’t Punish Global Day of Action

For the last eight years, efforts by Support. Don’t Punish campaigners have materialised with great dedication around a Global Day of Action, observed annually on 26 June.

This day is also the the United Nations’ International Day Against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. Historically, this date has been used by governments to showcase drug control “achievements” in coercive terms that have no positive impact on communities’ well-being.

From grandstanding declarations of war, to burning displays of seized drugs, and even public trials where people criminalised for drug offences are sent off for execution, the gruesome theatrics of the “war on drugs” glorify violence and punishment over human dignity and rights.

To shift the day’s narrative and advance effective, achievable solutions to drug-related challenges, every year, an increasing number of campaigners in hundreds of cities worldwide join this unique, diverse show of force for change.

This brief report showcases and summarises our collective efforts around the 2020 Support. Don’t Punish Global Day of Action.

“Opposing the gruesome theatrics of the “war on drugs”, campaigners propose effective, achievable solutions that centre rights and dignity”

LEAVING NO ONE BEHIND
A shared vision of caring, supportive societies

A wide range of actions and powerful displays of solidarity have taken place this year both in person and, adapting to the realities of a global pandemic, virtually.

Across the globe, from Argentina, to Indonesia to South Africa, the 2020 Global Day of Action saw activists organise to ensure no one was left behind in response to the emergencies caused by the COVID-19 situation, which has been devastating for people in situations of vulnerability.

Campaigners also put great effort in creating events that favoured building bonds within and between communities, with heart-warming examples in Mexico, Ukraine, Pakistan and Spain.

As in previous years, and perhaps more markedly than ever, the role of the arts has been central. Movie screenings, poster competitions and spoken word pieces marked a Global Day of Action brimming with creativity in times of great challenge.

Bridging community needs and government responses, many of the events opened and consolidated dialogue with policy-makers through public debates and forums in Cameroon, Honduras, North Macedonia and beyond.

The ingenuity and dedication of Support. Don’t Punish campaigners also translated into a substantial amount of media attention and coverage across all continents, amplifying the reach of our mobilisation.
CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES
CAMPAIGNING DURING THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC

RESISTING A PAINFUL YEAR
A pandemic upon pandemics

The Global Day of Action this year came at a time when populations already targeted by the “war on drugs” and intersecting forms of oppression had to face the burdens and perils of a growing COVID-19 pandemic.

The negative consequences of pre-existing conditions related to inadequate health and welfare systems (which fuel the HIV, hepatitis and overdoses crises), unsustainable economies (and the resulting poverty and inequality) and neglectful political institutions have been more visible than ever.

For populations targeted by the “war on drugs” and, in particular, for people who use drugs, the knock-on effects on existing situations of vulnerability and precariousness have been dramatic: Disruptions in the supply of drugs, including of essential medicines, such as methadone; restrictions in access to harm reduction services, including access to sterile equipment and needle and syringe programmes; physical distancing guidelines, which lead to more people using drugs alone; increased surveillance and violence by police forces; and many others have tested the resilience of our communities and compounded risks.

CAMPAIGNERS UNDETERRED
Solidarity that cannot be confined

Navigating these situations as well as the constraints in access to the public space and to decision-makers has been difficult for campaigners worldwide.

However, the crisis also led activists to rethink the way they organise and apply their creativity to their work. IDPC, as the campaign’s central hub, supported these efforts via a Bank of Ideas for Mobilisation under COVID-19 and advice at the pre-Day of Action webinar, in May 2020.

Activities that involved public gatherings, outreach programmes and public events had to be adapted to the new constraints – moving online, using new technologies, restricting the number of attendees, implementing a host of safety measures.

While the situation posed obvious challenges, the pandemic has put into sharp relief the importance of engaging and empowering communities in the response.

Grassroots initiatives demonstrated that they can react quickly and reach those who are often neglected by formal institutions, making sure that nobody is left behind and contributing to better health outcomes for all in an incredibly difficult situation.
WE CANNOT DO IT ALONE
“Growing the bubble” through coalitions

The unique challenges of organising in the time of COVID-19 has also allowed campaigners to extend their usual circles of collaboration and influence, and build coalitions within and between targeted communities and social movements.

A wonderful example of how coalition-building has flourished this year is highlighted by the European Network of People who Use Drugs (EuroNPUD), who stepped up as a powerful campaigning hub, utilising a rapid, multi-lingual partnership response to COVID-19.

EuroNPUD delivered their Time For A New Normal campaign for Support Don’t Punish Day and supplemented funding for their network’s Global Day of Action projects.

The campaign responded optimistically to the advocacy gains that have been secured in light of COVID-19, including rapid access to and longer-term take-home doses of opioid agonist therapy (OAT / OST) medication; more flexible and accessible forms of support; the empowerment of peer-led harm reduction initiatives, such as peer-to-peer naloxone distribution; and the provision of housing for street-based people.

EuroNPUD commissioned a poster based on the key messages, which has been translated to German, Estonian, Russian, Portuguese and more!

Intercambios Asociación Civil (Argentina) has also responded to these trialling times by building alliances through the #EstarEnLaDistancia (Together whilst distant) campaign.

Over 70 different organisations joined this social media campaign, which used audio-visual materials to raise awareness about the challenges faced by people who use drugs during the pandemic, and to bring the gaps in provision to the attention of the public opinion and political and health authorities.

Summing up these efforts, a declaration was produced and endorsed by 133 organisations and individuals!

The #EstarEnLaDistancia campaign had an important media impact, with some 15 news outlets reporting the initiative positively.

"We are particularly proud of having brought people from different corners of the globe together, and create connections beyond borders, from Argentina, to Germany to South Africa"

Amy Romanello, Youth Organiser, Students for Sensible Drug Policy - Germany
DON’T DEFLATE, INNOVATE!
Unleashing creativity to defy all odds

The obstacles discussed above also led activists to let their creativity soar, including in virtual spaces.

The campaign saw all sorts of innovations, including digital advocacy initiatives from Quezon City (the Philippines) to La Paz (Bolivia); art competitions in Brazil and Pakistan; trans-continental social media campaigns; and collective online letter-writing in Ukraine.

An example of crisis-responsive creative solutions came from NoBox Philippines (case study below). With support from the Women and Harm Reduction International Network, NoBox designed Caligtangan, an immersive ‘choose-your-own-adventure’ game inspired by the stories and testimonies of women incarcerated in the Philippines.

The Paradigma youth coalition hosted a global 24/7 decentralised e-conference, the first of its kind, with dozens of youth-led sessions on burning drug-related issues. This space free from stigma and discrimination involved dozens of young people from across the globe, a unique opportunity to share, connect and strategise together.

SISTERWUD: WOMEN WHO USE DRUGS BUILDING LOCAL SUPPORT

Metzineres, the first integrated harm reduction programme exclusively for women and gender non-conforming people, has taken part in the Support. Don't Punish Global Day of Action in Catalonia since the project's foundation, in 2017.

Metzi’s activity for this year aimed at reinforcing bonds between programme participants and the neighbours of El Raval, where Metzineres' drop-in centre is located, in downtown Barcelona.

The Juan Andrés agora, a plot of land reclaimed from dereliction by the locals, became a space to share ideas about the value of Metzineres, both for participants and the local community.

In a move that reflects the resourcefulness of Metzineres, programme participants became reporters during the event, making short video interviews that fed into a video feature documenting the Global Day of Action experience.

Aura, who coordinated the activity, explains a key goal of the activity was to challenge prevailing narratives on women who use drugs: ‘[When it comes to drugs,] there is a lot of talk about problems; we wanted to show what support looks like.’

While the neighbours of the drop-in centre had been highly cautious when Metzineres was first set up, the COVID-19 pandemic put into sharp relief everyone’s interdependence, and offered an opportunity to strengthen bonds of trust and solidarity.

By fostering dialogue and sharing experiences with the local community, Metzineres is de-constructing and undoing decades of stigma and discrimination directed at people who use drugs and in situations of vulnerability. And making it clear that kinder, respectful, more effective and empowering responses to drug-related challenges are possible and achievable.

The enthusiasm of the Global Day of Action had a scent of paella (a popular celebratory dish), as huge pans were prepared for the documentary’s première. The meal was a way to thank the neighbours and create yet another opportunity to build a sense of community.

This was the perfect occasion to build bridges, said Aura. ‘The Global Day of Action is one of the few moments in the year when allies from across Catalonia come to Barcelona and gather around an internationally recognised action. The Day creates space to do something positive for the community, as the whole world is listening. And we seize the moment to say:

“We are not victims, we are revolution!”

Between these two major events, ACRDR organised the distribution of masks, sanitary materials and meals to people who use drugs and live on the streets.

The early adoption and expansion of the Support. Don’t Punish campaign in Cameroon owes itself to the tenacity of a host of organisations and community-led networks, such as Empower Cameroon and PEP Sans Frontières, just to name a few.

This year, the Association Camerounaise pour la Réduction Des Risques liés à la consommation des drogues auprès des jeunes (ACRDR) joined the campaign’s global efforts with a number of public events.

First up, on 20 June, ACRDR organised a public debate to build common ground with people who might have never heard of drug policy reform or harm reduction: ‘Repression: Is it the solution?’.

The conversation took place in Yaoundé, the country’s capital, and saw the participation of people who use drugs and public authorities, including the National Commission for Human Rights and Freedoms, the National Committee for the Fight Against Drugs, the Ministry of Public Health and the Town Hall.

The week of activities concluded with an open fair organised on 26 June in the city of Douala, at the David Dagobert Fampou Stadium, near the New Bell prison.

ACRDR is an initiative co-led by people who use drugs and one of its goals is to foster connections within the community. The organisation’s embeddedness in the community allowed it to adequately and swiftly respond to the challenges posed by the pandemic.

Mélanie Bébégue, who leads ACRDR, explains how this close relationship with the community allowed ACRDR to offer timely support, especially to those experiencing situations of high vulnerability.
ACDRDR’s work is mostly voluntary and limited by the lack of funds.

The Support. Don’t Punish Global Day of Action grant was their first. She says the campaign’s grant has transformed the ACDRD’s relationship with local stakeholders. ‘On a personal level, it has made our efforts and hard work feel validated’.

“ACDRDR’s experience mobilising for the Global Day of Action highlights the importance of the campaign for young and developing initiatives rooted in the community.

Mélanie shared that ACDRD was only able to formally register last year and, despite the importance of its purpose, has struggled to find support from funders.

Although Mélanie has been able to leverage her own personal and professional connections to build bridges and create platforms for the voices of people who use drugs, ACDRD’s work is mostly voluntary and limited by the lack of funds.

The grant, she says, has put them ‘on the map’. ACDRD is now in regular correspondence with media outlets and has been able to promote the campaign’s messages on two television channels and nine radio programmes.

The Global Day of Action event also led to a collaboration with a local celebrity, Maahloxy, who has endorsed the goals of the campaign and joined Mélanie on radio appearances.

Another key highlight concerns the organisation’s engagement with public authorities, in particular from the Ministry of Health.

The week of activities saw a dialogue start between the newly appointed Minister and community members. This is a first for community members involved in ACRDR, who were able to share their first-hand experiences of the country’s drug policies and the challenges they face.

Mélanie says this would not have been possible without receiving a campaign grant. Alluding to the campaign’s reputation, she adds: ‘Without the financial support from the Support. Don’t Punish campaign, and the activities organised as part of the Global Day of Action, we would have not been taken seriously. There is clearly a need to continue engaging, and possibilities to do so, but if the funds are not available, then nothing will move.’
The Canberra Alliance for Harm Minimisation and Advocacy (CAHMA) is a peer-based group with a lineage that finds its roots in the very first community responses to the HIV epidemic in Australia.

The weekly radio show, News from the Drug War Front, is a CAHMA initiative, with support from colleagues in the entertainment industry.

For the 2020 Global Day of Action, the show, invited the women in their audience to share their life experiences in relation to drug policies and services, and the war on women who use drugs.

Each week, and in total confidentiality, the hosts selected two stories to be read on air. Each one of those stories was also rewarded with a cash prize.

This activity was supported by a grant from the Women and Harm Reduction International Network (WHRIN), whose engagement and leadership in the Support. Don’t Punish campaign has resulted in increased engagement and awareness of the specific challenges faced by women who use drugs.

This is not the first time CAHMA takes part in the Global Day of Action. Last year, they organised an art project featuring pieces produced by peers themselves, and exhibiting them in their community centre.

*"It is time we take ownership of the narrative!"

Natasa Nikolic, Programme Coordinator at CAHMA*
This year, says Natasa Nikolic, who led on the organisation of activities, ‘we wanted to do something more empowering and wide-ranging’.

Natasa says the idea for the activity came from the realisation of a glaring omission in terms of realistic representations of women who use drugs in mainstream media:

‘There is rarely a first-person point of view of women who use drugs; especially in the radio. We never hear real stories that authentically reflect the experiences of the source, the real problems, using the original words. It is time we take ownership of the narrative!’

As CAHMA also does advocacy for the rights of women who use drugs, they also quickly realised that these stories are precious input to inform research and strengthen their advocacy work.

The radio show’s audience also noted this, with local researchers offering to do a qualitative analysis of the submissions.

CAHMA is currently working on the next phase of the project.

Yet another positive impact came from the reaction by men in the community, who report the stories ‘opened their eyes in terms of having better understandings of the specific additional challenges faced by women who use drugs’.

The multiplier effect of the campaign’s small grants as a means to empower communities to mobilise effectively, and in their own terms, is reflected by the responses to the project.

Most of the weekly award winners, for instance, decided to donate their cash prize in order to ensure the programme continued to run and more stories were collected and shared.

Moreover, the project was able to run for 8 weeks longer than originally planned thanks to an anonymous donation from a community member!

Solidarity generates solidarity.
UKRAINIAN DRUG POLICY WITHOUT JOKERS
A NATIONAL COALITION TO END CRIMINALISATION

2020 Global Day of Action in Ukraine
Initiatives Programme highlight

PUD.UA / VOLNA is the national Ukrainian network of people who use drugs and people living with addiction. The network exists to develop collective strength, respond to community needs and promote rights-affirming policies and practices that depart from harmful criminalisation and exclusion.

This year, VOLNA was the recipient of an award by the Support. Don’t Punish Initiatives Programme, a novel funding facility for campaigning and advocacy work made possible thanks to the invaluable contribution of the Elton John AIDS Foundation (EJAF).

The Initiatives Programme supported six strategic, creative and collaborative workplans by community-led organisations and allies building momentum toward the 2020 Global Day of Action.

VOLNA produced its work-plan from a situation analysis, identifying the most pressing issues for the community that involve government and parliamentary authorities, law enforcement officers, medical professionals and the press.

Their assessment, structured in spaces for peers to share lived experiences and stories, brought to the fore a common sense of frustration over the authorities’ slow change, despite years of engagement.

From this collective weariness came the concept for the 2020 Initiatives Programme: ‘Ukrainian Drug Policy without Jokers’.

Here, the joker symbolises the lack of genuine acknowledgement of responsibility by government officials and other authorities responsible for the implementation of drug policy.

This large-scale campaign was carried out nationally, as VOLNA provided support to local groups of people who use drugs in Belaya Tserkov, Cherkassy, Chernivtsi, Dnipro, Ivano-Frankivsk, Kharkov, Kiev, Kirovograd, Kryvyi Rih, Lugansk, Lutsk, Lviv, Mariupol, Odessa, Poltava, Slavyansk, Sumy, Zaporozhye and Zhitomir.

The Programme unfolded in three stages:

CAMPAIGNING FOR FREEDOM

Standing up to arbitrary arrests

As the Initiatives Programme was being planned, two high-profile cases of illicit arrests in secessionist republics stood before the office of the Ombudsman: that of Andrey Yarovoy, who was finally released on 29 December 2019; and that of Natalya (Natasha) Zelenina, detained by authorities of the so-called Donetsk People’s Republic on the grounds she was carrying buprenorphine, a common form of opioid agonist therapy. These were seconded by a far-reaching social media campaign.

VOLNA also submitted written appeals to the Ombudsman, the Ministry of Health and the Police to urge their active involvement in efforts to free Natasha.

Natasha remains deprived of her liberty but VOLNA’s advocacy led to an opening in channels of dialogue with the government in relation to the country’s Drugs Strategy (which expires in 2020) and the drafting of the next one.

EVENTS IN 25 REGIONS

End punishment, affirm human rights, provide medical and social assistance

The activities organised were incredibly varied, involved over 150 community representatives and all focused on demands to the government and, in particular, the Ministry of Internal Affairs, to follow UN advice and decriminalise people who use drugs.

In twelve of the regions, networks of people who use drugs were joined by initiatives from convergent movements (including people living with HIV, sex workers and service providers), strengthening a solidarity block against criminalisation.

SETTING THE COURSE
Open letter to decision-makers

Fifteen organisations signed an open letter stating the demands of the drug user movement. These included the expansion of harm reduction services and the removal of criminal penalties for activities related to drug use, as well as other policies and practices that build solidarity, reduce harm and protect health and human rights. The letter was supported by a press release and media outreach.

OPENING A WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY
Toward recognition and reform

The activities organised by VOLNA have reinforced the community’s capacity for mobilisation and engagement with decision-makers.

A powerful example is the decision of the Supreme Council (the Ukrainian parliament) to engage community members in a process of review of the current national drugs strategy and the drafting of the next one.

Parliamentarians from the sub-committee in charge of this process, as well as other members of parliament, have vowed to keep decriminalisation in the horizon, and achieve legal change before 2030. As well as to continue engaging community representatives in the policy-development process.

Oleg, who managed the Initiatives Programme work-plan, plans to raise the bar even higher next year.

Through VOLNA’s campaigning and advocacy work, the network has become an indispensable voice representing the needs and interests of peers in Ukraine.

Their success at gaining access and recognition from decision-makers is long overdue, as well as emboldening.

Oleg is confident next year the campaign will be joined by the country’s political class, including the Office of the President, the heads of the regional administrations and parliamentarians (particularly from the health sub-committee).
The importance of community advocacy as a means to safeguard the health and welfare of people targeted by state violence and neglect is brought into sharp relief by the experience of the South African Network of People who Use Drugs (SANPUD) with the Support. Don’t Punish campaign.

In November 2019, SANPUD was awarded a grant as part of the campaign’s Initiatives Programme. The initial work-plan hinged on harm reduction trainings and a fascinating PhotoVoice project, with the goal of bringing to the fore personal stories narrated in the first person through the art of photography.

When the COVID-19 pandemic hit, however, SANPUD nimbly adapted their response to prioritise the most pressing needs of peers made particularly vulnerable by intersecting forms of oppression.

NOT HOUSED, BUT WAREHOUSED
Responding to the emergency precipitated by forced relocations

In response to the pandemic in Cape Town, the government authorities decided to relocate, often forcibly, the city’s street-based population.
Movement restrictions were imposed and enforced, impeding people from leaving makeshift camps.

While opioid agonist therapy (OAT/OST) take-home doses are available in the city through the Step-Up Project, the programme’s reach remains highly limited.

As a result, dozens of street-based people living with opioid dependence found themselves corralled in a foreign environment, without access to their regular channels of supply.

SANPUD quickly responded with a dual strategy. On one hand, reaching out to stakeholders to try to secure a safe supply of OAT and naloxone for the people in the city's Strandfontein camp.

And, on the other hand, mobilising the necessary resources to ensure symptomatic medication to alleviate the suffering associated with opioid withdrawal.

Acknowledging the gravity of the situation, and with the support of the Elton John AIDS Foundation, some of the Initiatives Programme funds were quickly reprogrammed to secure much-needed medication.

SANPUD collaborated with a specialist doctor to assist community members in the camp, some of whom had to be transported by ambulance services to the hospital for further care, given their dire state of health.

‘Arriving on site to happy “Hi sister!” calls from residents who know that help has arrived was an uplifting experience’, said MJ Stowe, Project Manager at SANPUD.

While the levels of need exceeded SANPUD’s capacity for support, they also assisted people who were critically ill and of an advanced age. Yet another expression of the spirit of solidarity in community responses, in the near total absence of anything similar from official authorities.

Besides providing much-needed immediate relief to peers in need, this activity allowed SANPUD to show the power of grassroots mobilisation under the campaign, both to fellow community members and city authorities.

SANPUD has, since, continued to grow in strength, their work acknowledged by city and national authorities. Indeed, in a regional first, the network was officially launched by the South African Deputy Minister for Social Development in October 2020.

"Seeing people recover from withdrawal being able to eat and walk again filled us with joy. Once recovered, many provided assistance to others who were only beginning to experience withdrawal.

MJ Stowe, Project Manager (SANPUD)"
In line with SANPUD’s belief that community members should have agency over their well-being, the network organised a series of learning resources to share harm reduction information. These included: A webinar on the existing provision of harm reduction services in South Africa, how they had been impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic and responses to it, and the impacts on street-based people. And peer-led naloxone administration and overdose-prevention training sessions (in May and June), which included the provision of prescribed naloxone as well as information on how to obtain it through healthcare professionals.

The third pillar of SANPUD’s Initiative Programme was the PhotoVoice project.

SANPUD collaborated with South Africa’s only ‘housing-first’ residence, which opened its doors on 1 June 2020, to reach out to people who use and/or have used drugs and invite them to use photography to illustrate how their drug use had impacted their lives, positively or negatively.

On 26 June 2020, for the campaign’s Global Day of Action, StreetScapes and SANPUD hosted an exhibition of the photographs. Campaign goodies were distributed and the project’s participants were able to share their stories with peers and attendees.

SANPUD’s MJ Stowe said the space was an opportunity to make visible the complexity of the lived experiences of people who use drugs.

In a country where drug policies are anchored both in prohibitionist laws and the legacy of apartheid and racism, the PhotoVoice project offered an antidote to caricaturisation, instead placing real, individual, nuanced, experiences at the centre.

SANPUD and StreetScapes expect to recreate the exhibition in new spaces once the emergency of the pandemic subsides.
VIRTUAL STORIES, REAL LIVES

SHARING THE IMPACT OF INCARCERATION ON WOMEN CRIMINALISED FOR DRUG OFFENCES

2020 Global Day of Action in the Philippines

Based in Quezon City, the most populous city in the Philippines, NoBox gave its first steps as a residential centre. While it continues to provide services, anchored in harm reduction, their work has grown research and advocacy arms that mobilise for drug policies that respect everyone’s inherent dignity.

NoBox joined the Support. Don’t Punish campaign for the first time six years ago and, since then, has delivered innovative work-plans that build bridges and fight divisive narratives on people involved in informal drug markets.

NoBox usually starts planning activities at the beginning of each year, to maximise impact and mature creative ideas.

This year, their plan was to build on their ongoing projects on the impact of incarceration on women criminalised for drug offences.

Adapting to the realities of COVID-19, and with support from WHRIN, the idea transformed into Caligtangan, a ‘choose-your-own-adventure’ online story inspired by documented experiences of women incarcerated in the Philippines.

The web-based interactive story allows visitors to gain a better understanding of the lives of women incarcerated for drug offences.

Countering both demonising and disempowering narratives, the online application takes visitors for a journey that allows them to see how criminalised women’s lives and choices are heavily mediated by intersecting forms of oppression and exclusion, which are heightened and worsened by imprisonment.

NoBox’s resourcefulness shines through the social media promotion campaign that preceded the release of Caligtangan.

Originally, before the pandemic emergency, the organisation was planning a ‘museum of trinkets’, an exhibition of everyday objects that become ‘luxury items’ for women deprived of their liberty. These include hygiene supplies, comfort food and devices to communicate with family.

The idea was refashioned into online ‘teasers’ featuring the objects, designed to build interest in Caligtangan while starting to familiarise audiences with the hardships experienced by incarcerated women.

This social media campaign was supplemented with links to research papers and reports, including by NoBox, which is involved in research projects in this area with the University of the Philippines Diliman.

The promotion of Caligtangan reached over 5,000 people and the online resource is expected to transform perspectives and build solidarity way beyond its launch.

NoBox is currently working with a local online magazine writing an article about the project, which the organisation is aiming to translate into local languages.
PHOTO PROJECT
AN EVER-GROWING PHOTO PETITION

The Photo Project is a key component of the Support. Don’t Punish campaign. As an ever-growing, open, photo petition with over 10,000 entries to date, the Photo Project showcases the breadth of this global effort.

Snaps feature advocates, community members, government and UN officials, celebrities, and a long etcetera - all united under a clear, universal, shared message: Support. Don’t Punish.

If you wish to add your photo to the list, please do not hesitate to send them to campaign@idpc.net.

ADVANCING THE END OF THE “WAR ON DRUGS”
OUTCOMES FROM THE 2020 GLOBAL DAY OF ACTION

HIGH AND SUSTAINED ENGAGEMENT
Mobilising for harm reduction, against the odds

The pandemic was incredibly disruptive but not paralysing. With the sustained support of donors, and assistance and encouragement from IDPC and other campaign ‘hubs’, Support. Don’t Punish campaigners quickly adapted to navigate the challenges of mobilising during a global pandemic.

Through 288 events in 239 cities of 90 countries, campaigners sought to leave no one behind, bringing attention to the needs of people who use drugs and other populations targeted by the “war on drugs”.

This sustained engagement was, and continues to be, crucial to respond to immediate challenges in relation to government responses to the pandemic, and to strengthen the foundations of sustainable, rights-affirming, alternatives to punitive drug policies.

INFLUENCE AND AWARENESS
Shifting public opinion, undoing stigma

With over 100 media hits in 40 countries and 30 expressions of support by high-reach personalities, influencers and state officials, the 2020 Global Day of Action excelled at reclaiming the commemorations of 26 June.

For too long, media messages have been dominated by outdated discourses prioritising retributive violence and punishment. One of the most successful impacts of the campaign over the last eight years has been to shift the dial, through sustained, visible, networked global activism.

STRENGTHENING BONDS OF SOLIDARITY
People power to empower people

The Support. Don’t Punish campaign recognises that punitive drug policies fuel and feed off structures of oppression that divide our communities and marginalise people who are unfairly deemed undesirable.

Campaigners contest this unequal access to services, health and welfare, which is det-
We have new activists, volunteers, partners from human rights organisations, the media, and National Councils. And built a supportive relationship with UNAIDS.

Other communities are also supporting our cause, such as people living with HIV, LGBT people and NGOs working to support formerly incarcerated people.

PULS, Republic of Moldova

This year, over half of the campaign’s funds in support of campaigning and advocacy activities were attributed to community-led initiatives, a record that we aim to continue to build upon.

Through our feedback processes, campaigners have regularly raised the importance of this financial and in-kind support.

Many organisations who mobilise with the Support. Don’t Punish campaign start out small; most are located in the Global South. The campaign’s mobilisation grants support communities capacity to affirm their own rights and propose change that makes sense to them. This grassroots support has deeply transformative impacts.

For some campaigners, receiving funding from a globally-recognised initiative makes their work more credible in the eyes of local officials, promoting participation and accountability.

The Global Day of Action has also been crucial to bring people-centred, first-person narratives into the public sphere, countering often alienating mainstream accounts dominated by stigma and myth.
Amidst increasing pressure from reactionary anti-democratic forces, strengthening campaigning and advocacy capacity of civil society and community networks is a matter of urgency.

The challenges faced by campaigners worldwide are not dissimilar. On our own, they seem impossibly daunting. Campaigning together, they appear necessarily conquerable.

The Support. Don’t Punish campaign materialises international solidarity in transformative, emboldening ways that centre communities targeted by the “war on drugs”.

The campaign’s Global Day of Action creates spaces and platforms for grassroots initiatives to do what they do best: unleash and potentiate people power to contest punitive responses to drugs and advance sustainable alternatives based on care, compassion and the respect of everyone’s inalienable human rights.

In doing so, the Global Day of Action is unparalleled in energising a common and growing front of communities, activists, professionals of different sectors, artists, decision-makers and all manners of allies to stand up for harm reduction under the umbrella of our shared dignity.

Together, our voices are louder, our collective message stronger, our capacity to make change unstoppable. Support. Don’t Punish!

AN ECOSYSTEM OF SUPPORT

A DECENTRALISED EFFORT
The campaign’s modus operandi

The Support. Don’t Punish is an international decentralised networked effort, contributed to by thousands of campaigners and hundreds of local partner organisations worldwide.

The International Drug Policy Consortium hosts the Support. Don’t Punish campaign and acts as its main hub. As such, IDPC leads on global fundraising, capacity development and communication efforts, and provides material and in-kind support to campaigners across the globe.

THE CAMPAIGN’S SISTER HUBS
Championing our common cause worldwide

IDPC is in regular dialogue with organisations that actively promote the campaign and contribute to the mobilisation of grassroots groups, including through their own fundraising efforts.

These sister hubs often have a regional or thematic focus. Their commitment has been crucial for the campaign’s growth and many of the activities that have been mentioned above owe themselves to their unwavering dedication.

For this reason, an account of the 2020 Support. Don’t Punish Global Day of Action would not be complete without acknowledging the fantastic work of sister hubs such as: the Drug Policy Network South East Europe (DPNSEE), the Eurasian Network of People Who Use Drugs (ENPUD), the European Network of People Who Use Drugs (EuroNPUD), Frontline AIDS and the PITCH Programme, the India HIV/AIDS Alliance, the Middle East and North Africa Harm Reduction Association (MENAHRA), the Women and Harm Reduction International Network (WHRIN) and YouthRISE.

CAMPAIGN DONORS
Resourcing people power for harm reduction

Last, but by no means least, IDPC is incredibly grateful to the campaign’s donors, who provide absolutely essential, yet scarce, means for campaigners to challenge criminalisation and promote harm reduction.

IDPC has received dedicated campaign funds from the Elton John AIDS Foundation; the PITCH Programme, via Frontline AIDS; and the Robert Carr Fund. Important core support has also been received from the Open Society Foundations.
